The Missing People Choir reduced viewers to tears as they performed on Britain's Got Talent tonight.

Kate McCann is an ambassador for the choir after daughter Madeleine McCann went missing in 2007.

Hundreds of people have taken to social media to express their emotion at the group.

One person tweeted: "Actually cried my eyes out at the Missing People's Choir on #BGT #wow".

Another added: "The Missing People Choir is such a tearjerker and a heartbreaker."

Someone else wrote: "Missing People's Choir - so much respect."

Another added: "I have absolutely no words watching the missing people's choir I am sobbing. Something so important and powerful."

Kate McCann is a non-singing member of the group, who performed I Miss You on tonight's show.

The group includes both people who have missing family members, or workers for the charity.

After the performance, judge Amanda Holden said: "I thought that was an extraordinary song and it must echo how many of you feel. But I'm glad you've all got each other and I'm glad that you've turned such a dreadful thing into something so positive."
